New Screen Magazine

No. 70

One Reel

EDWARD GLAVIN, of Tuckahoe, N. Y., may live in a small town, but he has large ideas. He has perfected a form of wireless control called "the wireless hound" whereby a boat responding to wireless control is steered around without a crew.

Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City is a strong argument for the much negated theory that one can be a politician and idealist at the same time. For the Mayor, although a busy man in a busy city, has yet been instrumental in establishing one of the most humanitarian institutes in the world—The Mothers' Institute, where sick babies are taken care of and made well and where mothers are instructed in the physical welfare of their offspring. There is no hospital atmosphere in this Home and surgical instruments are not permitted.

There is the usual collection of "laughographs" in this issue of the magazine and a Cinema Luke animated.
